Question	Answer
01	No You can't define autism it presents in all different ways for everyone that has it
02	Yes
03	Not sure
04	Yes Yes they should follow the bill it would help autistic people a lot more if people had a better understanding and strategies they could follow
05	It needs to be done asap autistic people need the help and support now
06	3 months is plenty of time to get it done I think
08	They should get a diagnosis asap I was lucky with my son getting a diagnosis within a year some people are not that lucky...but even with his diagnosis after 2 years of trying we still can't get him any help in school or transferred to a more specialised unit
09	Yes Definitely
10	Yes
11	The person's doctor should be consulted on the person being assessed as in .most cases they have known the person all their lives and can give a better rundown on the person's behaviours ect
12	Sometimes ticks as we call them can stop an autistic person being employed as they can't keep still and also some like my son have Tourettes which also puts employers off
13	Yes
14	Also a bit about the individual person as everyone is different and behaves differently
15	It should be written in the guidance.
16	Yes

17	It should happen all the time. All the time it needs to be as it helps people to better understand people with autism and the everyday struggles they have that others without autism don't have to worry about
18	It will be a great help for people with autism and their families and maybe get them more help and support where needed
